This book is a review of the existing literature and policy-based initiatives to address this phenomenon. The book also offers a new framework which offers a model for looking at security issues, namely that they are governed by three different but interrelated factors: human, societal and environmental. On the basis of that model, the authors offer suggestions for a more collaborative approach to these issues. Most of the book is based on the author's own research and writing on the subject which has been used by the Board of Governors for the Canadian Security Intelligence Service in preparing an Annual Report for the Chaired of Committee on Issues of Terrorism. Included in this report are seven discussion papers which are illustrative of the book's approach. The book can be used to inform governments, intergovernmental organizations, professional organizations, academia, and senior officials. The book should serve as a resource for domestic and international terrorism policy makers, security policy makers, the environmental sector, environmental protection, law enforcement, and the news media.
