Martin's "A Song of Ice and Fire" series) knows that Jon Snow's appearance is important to the series' ongoing storyline. But is he equally important to the "Game of Thrones" franchise as a whole? One group that appears to think so is the studio that manages the rights to "Game of Thrones." A new report from The Hollywood Reporter claims that the hold-up with that "Game of Thrones" season 8 trailer has a lot to do with timing. HBO had wanted to drop the trailer a couple weeks before the series returns in April, but they reportedly wanted to make sure that the characters and their relationships were ready. That way, it's easier to sneak in the deaths of a few major characters, like Cersei and The Mountain, with little fanfare. "We've been waiting for the trailer for a long time now," one source told THR. "They'd have to be pretty bold to drop the trailer before it airs. It just doesn't happen." In other words, this is probably just another case of a major studio holding back a big reveal until it can finally release that trailer, after we've all had a chance to watch it. Or, you know, until it's really late in the game, since this report implies that the last season of "Game of Thrones" is currently airing, with episodes 1, 2, and 3 being filmed back-to-back in Northern Ireland.Q: How to pass a Model to a Controller Action I am trying to pass the model to the action in ASP.NET MVC Action method [AcceptVerbs(HttpVerbs.Post)] public ActionResult CreateClosingEvent(ClosingEventViewModel model) { if (ModelState.Is
