More info »Q: Randomly generate array of different size and populate it with chosen elements There is a big list of names (arbitrary length), and a small list of matching strings to give out to each element of this list (arbitrary length). How do I create an array and randomly pick out elements from the first list according to a certain criterion, and populate the second list with these elements? A: Assuming you want a list of length m to be populated with r elements chosen from the list of names... The predicate to filter out values from the list of names that should be included in the list returned by randomSample depends on what data structure you use and how it behaves. For a simple list of random elements... val randomNames = names.sample.take(m).map(_.toUpperCase) ... use a simple filter: def randomNames[T](names: List[T])(m: Int): List[T] = if (m == 0) List.empty[T] else names.filter(name => random.nextInt(m)) A crew member aboard an
