What's New in the Adobe Photoshop CS5?

in the draft. I'm glad you mentioned the Spurs. My father was a grad of the HS and went to the Spurs, then the George Mason University, and then the University of Texas and became a well known pediatrician. He used to talk about the Spurs like they were his last and first love. He would joke about how Spurs fans were like his own personal version of U.S. presidents. Although you mention the Hornets as just a favorite team, I grew up in New Orleans. Even when I came out as a Hornets fan, I appreciated the Spurs as well. It was really the only team besides the Mavericks and the Heat that had a home-court advantage over my beloved Saints. Hmmm..... I guess I'm a mix of "First fan" and "Second fan", or at least mostly the former. The Spurs were the reason I started making my own sports identity. I was (am) a Tarheel who sometimes watched the Tarheels, but the Spurs became the white knuckles of the sports world. I'm not sure if I've ever suggested adding to the post, but here's another possibility. It would be great to have a Spurs page, or at least a post, about the early days of the franchise. The post might include stories of the old Arena/Dell/Aksarben/Jackson Park arena, and a beginning for Spurs history. Also, I remember the bench at the old arena had a bench phone with a long-distance channel...the game might be the signal was somewhere outside San Antonio, but you could call whoever you wanted to talk to. I hope to see this in a future post. I'm the guy who over-the-top cheered for the "S" at school when we played at the Taft Center in the mid '80s, and I can still remember the first time I actually saw a Spurs game, an overtime win in Phoenix on March 27, '89, or maybe the year I first went to a regular season game, '90, when the Spurs blew out my old team, the Yankees. I'll always be a "S" fan. I think I was around age 12 or 13, or maybe younger. Dan I don't know if you remember this, but i've been looking for a
