Although Photoshop is quite capable, it is not necessary that every image is edited in Photoshop; in fact, many may prefer other tools. Photoshop is a powerful tool; however, it also has many complex features. Even if you end up never using the tool, the time you invest can be used to master other applications. Painting In the field of painting, Photoshop continues to be popular. Because it is available on a wide variety of platforms, it has several uses for painters. Painting in Photoshop is similar to painting in paint.com on a computer, and paintball on a trackball. It allows you to use the two-dimensional (2D) or 3D tools on a raster image (that is, an image made up of many pixels). To create a raster image, you start with a blank canvas that you can make transparent to see through, and then add layers. You can use layer styles to change the opacity and blend modes of the layers. Multiple layers can be stacked on top of each other to create a 3D image. The following figure shows layers used in a simple painting. Creating layers Photoshop is a raster-based application in which everything is made up of individual pixels (often referred to as tints). You create a raster image by taking a picture. The pixels of a raster image are set in a grid of rows and columns. To create a new layer, click the New Layer icon on the Photoshop toolbar. The New Layer dialog box opens, as shown in Figure 1. The dialog box allows you to name and then create a new layer. The New Layer dialog box also shows you the location in the Layers panel where the new layer will appear. Click OK to create the new layer and name it. Creating a new layer lets you work on the layer without disturbing others. You can click the pencil icon in the Layer Options bar (circled in Figure 1) to change the layer so it does not show in the Layers panel. Because you can see through the layer, it's useful to create a new layer and modify it while you're looking at the image. Selecting and moving layers As a non-destructive application, Photoshop lets you select multiple layers and move them, change them, and even merge them. In the Layers panel, select an area that will not contain other layers. Click the Selection

Geological Restoration 7/8/10 Geology refers to the study of the Earth's crust, including the solid layer of the Earth, called the lithosphere, surrounded by the asthenosphere and epipelagic zone. The result of earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and other geological events changes the landscape of the Earth's surface. Thus, efforts to restore the land, such as the tsunami, landslide, and volcanic eruption recovery efforts, are often carried out on a national scale. The effort, however, depends on a country's natural resources. The most common type of natural disasters are earthquakes and landslides. Geology is also important in the study of petroleum and natural gas. In the late 1800s and early 1900s, the US Geological Survey mapped and mapped out the oil reserves of the western part of the United States. Oils and gas were extracted from the ground and sold, at times, for $0.03 to $0.04 (the dollar today is worth about $3) per barrel, which was a lot of money at the time. These oil reserves were considered a national treasure and were carefully monitored by the Geological Survey. However, in the 1970s, new technology for drilling for oil and gas brought the oil and gas industry to the forefront of the world. During the last ten years, as the demand for oil has grown, many oil companies are trying to extract oil from the land and sea. The effects of the Earth's crust change the surface of the Earth. A volcanic eruption changes the surface of the Earth. Under certain conditions, the eruption affects the mountain on which the volcano is located. This change can happen if the volcano is directly located under a mountain or mountain range. The eruption sends out magma deep into the Earth's crust. The magma may become so intense that the rock becomes hot enough to melt and form a lava flow. Then, the lava flow, carried along by the Earth's crust, may join together with other lava flows to form a mountain. If the magma reaches the surface of the Earth, it may form a volcano. Volcanoes are areas of land where a mass of molten rock has been forced up from the Earth's interior. The magma may be collected on the surface of the Earth or it may meet the Earth's surface because of a fault or because of rising groundwater pressure. In addition to the lava, the volcano may leave behind a crater and ash in the shape of a pile of rocks or a small mountain

Effects include shadow, layer effects, and filters. The Gradient Tool allows you to apply any color or gradient across the layers. You can even change the direction in which colors move, to create complex effects. Free Transform allows you to rotate, resize, distort, and skew an object. You can use this tool for creating patterns, typography and creating compositions. The Pen Tool is a useful tool that allows you to draw geometric shapes, paths, and text. You can use the Pen Tool for creating geometric patterns, or for drawing straight lines, curves, or art. Photoshop Elements is a free version of Photoshop that offers many of the same features. Q: require login before rendering each component in routes/web.php I have a web app built on Laravel 4 that consists of multiple components (one of them being dashboard). I have a login component in app/frontend/components that checks the user login status. I want to have a login required on each of the following two routes: Route::get('/dashboard', 'Components\Dashboard\DashboardController@viewDashboard') Route::get('/welcome', 'Components>Welcome>WelcomeController@viewWelcome') How do I do this? A: First you have to add you login component in the web middleware. protected $middleware = array('App\Http\Middleware\EncryptCookies'); Then create a middleware protected $routeMiddleware = array('login' => 'App\Http\Middleware\Authenticate', 'welcome' => 'App\Http\Middleware\Stack'); And use the middleware on each route like this: Route::get('/dashboard', 'Components\Dashboard\DashboardController@viewDashboard')->middleware('authenticate'); Route::get('/welcome', 'Components>Welcome>WelcomeController@viewWelcome')->middleware('authenticate'); If you want you can add a middleware protected $middleware = array('App\Http\Middleware\EncryptCookies', 'App\Http\Middleware\VerifyCsrfToken'); and then Route::get('/dashboard', 'Components\Dashboard\DashboardController@viewDashboard')->middleware('
