Video Visual LISP, part of Autodesk's LISP language, is used to create custom user interfaces for its applications. The development environment is called Acceleration Framework. Visual LISP was created in 1993 at the Autodesk company to allow the creation of visual interfaces in CAD applications. It was originally called LISP Tools, but was changed to Visual LISP in 2000. AutoCAD and other AutoCAD-based applications are built on the Visual LISP framework. Visual LISP, like AutoLISP, is a high-level programming language that can be used to create applications for AutoCAD. LISP is a dialect of the Lisp programming language, and consists of lists, functions and dynamic binding. The building blocks of AutoCAD and AutoCAD LT are designed to be used with both AutoLISP and Visual LISP. AutoCAD and AutoCAD LT are supported by both Visual LISP and AutoLISP. ObjectARX is the next-generation C++ class library that offers more performance, better usability and is completely portable. Documentation The official documentation for AutoCAD and Autodesk's other software is provided by Autodesk. This includes the vast amount of documentation online at the Autodesk Developer Network site, as well as the related books and magazines. However, it is also possible to purchase from third-party publishers the CD-ROMs, DVD-ROMs or USB thumb drives that contain large quantities of the official product documentation, as well as other materials. These CD-ROMs and DVDs are generally aimed at specific types of users, such as AutoCAD specialists, and often have associated materials to match them to the target audience. Licenses AutoCAD is available in both per-seat and per-copy licenses. It is available either as a single-seat, two-seat or multi-seat application. For the multi-seat option, AutoCAD LT is bundled in with the main application, so that a multi-user solution can be created with just a single license for the entire environment. For instance, two students in a university lab could use one license, or 10 users in an office could share one license. The per-seat license includes a number of AutoCAD LT products in addition to the main application. The license requires a fixed annual payment to be paid to ca3bfb1094
