Activar cualquier producto de Adobe CC.South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley approved an executive order Wednesday for a review of the state's paper mill in Limestone County, the first step in revoking a permit for the controversial plant. Hundreds of opponents and supporters of the paper mill united in the wake of the April raid by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA), which resulted in "multiple citations" issued against the facility for alleged workplace safety violations. Among the violations documented by OSHA, the agency said in a report, was the "prolonged exposure of workers to certain hydrocarbon emissions." The mill and the state's Department of Health and Environmental Control (DHEC) were the subject of multiple complaints and investigations, and it was found to be in violation of every permit and agreement the state has with the paper mill, according to a statement on the DHEC website. The energy efficiency certificate the mill received from the South Carolina Industrial Energy Agency cited "dozens of energy and emission related compliance issues," according to the statement. The executive order will give state officials three months to conduct the review of the facility, submit the findings and recommendations, and the director of the DHEC will make the final decision, the agency said. Haley said in a statement on the DHEC website that the plant must now "be held accountable for the inspection findings and the inaction with regard to the many violations," and the executive order "is the appropriate course of action at this time." and more. See the controversial fashion moments of 2016 OSHA citations have led to the closure of 45 mills, and South Carolina's only other remaining paper mill, in Summerville, is not facing any enforcement action, a DHEC spokeswoman told The Greenville News. The state will close the company's three remaining paper mills, said the spokeswoman, who was not
