????? ????? Q: How to maintain two - if statements in the same branch in React/Redux I am new to Redux and I am trying to figure out how it works, but my problem is that I want to have two if statements that have different paths in Redux. The first part runs just fine, but after that the counter drops to zero and I have no idea why. My action is called by the fetchIfLoggedIn function. The state should work like this: When the state drops to 0, it should stay at 0. When the state is above 0 then I should subtract from this amount. Then when the state drops to 0 I should subtract from this amount as well. If the user is not logged in, the state is equal to 0; if he is logged in, the state is equal to 1. I tried to add two if statements that should run in the same branch, but somehow the state drops to 0, even though that branch is never triggered. Is there a problem in my understanding of how Redux works? All the code:

import React from "react"; import { connect } from "react-redux"; function fetchIfLoggedIn() { const [isLoggedIn, setIsLoggedIn] = useState(false); const hasAuth = () =>
localStorage.getItem("token")!== null;
const isLoggedInAndNotExpired = async () => { await hasAuth(); return true; }
return [isLoggedIn,
isLoggedInAndNotExpired]; } function
useProfile() { const [profile, setProfile] = useState(null); const [isLoggedIn, fetchIfLoggedIn] = useReducer(function(previousState, action) { const [, setValue] =
previousState; return [
