The game revolves around the mystery of the Boogeyman, whose existence you must discover in the darkness. With every move you make, you have to think carefully, and be aware of the mood of the room and its occupants. Make sure you're always alert, and keep a close eye on your flashlight, because it'll only last for so long, and then your exit will be blocked. The game is free to play in full VR. Use the controller to look around, pan, and zoom, to search for clues or monsters, or to solve puzzles. But if you use the controller, you'll also want to use voice commands to communicate with your friends, or to use your flashlight to create light or communicate in the dark. The doll will even get into the action on your behalf, serving as your flashlight. Move it by looking at it, or by shaking it. Use it to make noise and lure monsters, or to light your way. You can also use the controller to push the doll around or to grab and lift objects. Features:

- Original character animation, with voice support (see how the doll sounds here)
- Occasional nods to other horror classics: The hitman in the New Orleans Public Library with an accent, the psycho in the subway, the bookstore in the big city (but not the scary one).
- Choose from four different worlds to explore, populated by four different monsters. Each world has its own theme.
- Monster AI: The monsters have their own personalities, and can speak. If you approach a monster they'll move and attack. If they sense danger, they'll try to flee, but they also have their own weaknesses.
- Four different endings to the game.
- Player achievements (if you want them)
- Advanced monster AI
- Occasional nods to pop culture in the form of dialog and jokes.
- A unique audio experience with occasional sound effects and music.
- Hand-drawn pixel art.

Are you leaning toward getting a Chromebook for yourself this year? If so, Chromium OS is the operating system you need. And according to Google's Gabe Aul, it's pretty well-designed too. Just last week, Chrome OS got a new look and feel, a visual refresh that includes a more "Google-y" color scheme. The new look is clean and modern — except for its weird color scheme. People have long made observations about the color of human skin. For example, a person's complexion was a popular topic of interest for painting and literature. Pale skin was frequently regarded as a sign of intelligence or high status, while dark skin was commonly regarded as a sign of African heritage. Various adjectives have been applied to describe a person's complexion. For example, "suntanned", "milk-white", "oily", "tanned" and "powdered" were commonly used to describe the color of a person's skin, and the adjectives "light" and "dark" were commonly used to describe the complexion of the person. In modern times, certain colors are generally regarded as more desirable than others. For example, a person with fair complexion is often regarded as more desirable than a person with dark complexion. While this is generally regarded as a cultural preference, it has recently been recognized that the eye-lens and skin color of a person play a significant role in determining that person's attractiveness. According to recent data, women prefer men with light-colored irises. In a study published in a journal entitled "Effect of Irides on First Impressions: Implications for Prejudice, Discrimination and Stereotype" by Reed Larson, the author proposes that one of the primary reasons for the preference is that light-colored irises generally correspond to light-colored skin. Consequently, a person whose irises are darker than the surrounding iris color can have a "dark-colored iris effect", which makes the person appear more "dark-skinned". In contrast, a person with irises that are lighter than the surrounding iris color can have a "light-colored iris effect", which makes the person appear more "light-skinned". Thus, men with light irises appear more "fair-skinned", and thus more "attractive", than men with darker irises. In general, women prefer men with light-colored irises over men with darker irises. The color of

(or a more id est nerd...) January 17, 2019 Taste of the CodeWorld Expo Hungover. Slightly saddened about what I missed... Last year I went to the second open Gamercamp at VRChat. Have been waiting for the access code to get to the venue as the VR space is really quite small, and only the biggest of companies can afford getting into VRChat. The VRChat gallery + future events with CodeWorld are going to be amazing, but also really expensive. They asked people who bought (or pledged for) the VR pass the previous year to keep their access. (PS: I got both the Horde and the Infinity tickets, not the Ubuntu event where it stated there wouldn't be attendees, I'm just really bad with dates. Upgrading told me I'm on a dirty, dirty cycle) First, a whole lot of improvacting in the dark: Uninstalled Oculus (I didn't play enough this month to warrant another seat at the table) Uninstalled SteamVR Opened up SteamVR through the command line (to delete the "installed" traces) Installed Treachery, SteamVR, Verona Opened up

SuperTuxKart-VR (Pipe and Tux haven't logged in since... July?) Got Oculus link dock (in June) After the Art of The Digital Duet show: Launched Verona Opened up House-of-Doom by mouse (did I smell glue?) I stumbled into this rogue's gallery (which leads to JotunDrek + Splatoon called "Slovenian Death Worship.") I followed the Moebius tree (and the tree got dark with weird shapes popping up...) and found the entrance to the torture chamber. I followed a few bloody drek paths to a rusty box, smelt wasps and rust... On the way there, I found a bunch of crates, some kind of garden, some windows... A few were unlocked, and looking into them I discovered I could spawn a bit of flora. (Not the most civilised one.) And I triggered it, to discover I could get my hands on some... ...Hello and Goodbye (by the way, while I knew how VR worked before,

In a world not far removed from ours, Mors, the god of blood, fights for the noble right of his people to survive. Though he is a god, he struggles to actually gain any agency in his world. As such, this piece is largely an allegory on the events happening throughout Westeros today, from the War of the Five Kings to the War of the Ninepenny Kings. It's a time of turmoil and Mors must decide how much he's willing to fight for his home. This is a sequel to Tale of the Forgotten, continuing where the game left off. If you never played Tale of the Forgotten, you might want to read the description of the game before you proceed. Key Features:

- Over 50 hours of gameplay, including a new exciting chapter and a new ending
- Create your own legend! Choose your outcome and complete the game with different style of victory!
- 'Discover your destiny' with a wide range of possibilities in this game!
- Perfect for fans of the TV Show!
- Choices matter! Make the right decisions and the story of Mors will be different!
- Fight on foot, on horse, in gladiator arena... Each battle will have it's own style and difficulty!
- New game systems, such as Horse Reinforcement and "Wisdom of the Breeds"!
- New

armor: Ravenclaw's "Death". • Famous characters from the TV Show, such as Maester Aemon, Bronn, Tyrion Lannister and, of course, the Hound! • New locations, such as Kings Landing, Maidenpool, King's Landing and more! DRAGONHOUND - The White Walkers come and march on Kings Landing! Every lord has to give up his title and his cloak, or else be burned alive. And before they arrive, the Hound is there. He takes the wheel of a single ship across a sea of ice, to take his loyalties to Mors, the god of blood. GOD'S EYE MASTER HOUND - King's Landing and the entirety of Westeros were once home to a group of masters who looked after Mors' dog, a massive white hound that walked with pride. Years later, the last of the masters have returned from the dead, and Mors is determined to restore the order of the Seven Kingdoms. PER
