Why does std::merge return different results with different C++ compilers? I found that at least on my machine, using different compilers produce different results for a simple C++ program: #include #include #include using namespace std; template void sort5(s) { int n = s.size(); if (n == 0) return; int i = 0; int first = 0; int last = n; int end; while (first < last) { end = (first + last) / 2; if (first == end) { swap(first, end); end = -1; } sort(s.begin(), s.begin() + first); sort(s.begin() + last + 1, s.end()); } } int main() { string s; cin >> s; sort5(s); cout
