Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a radiation image storage panel employed in a radiation imaging system using radiation, in particular, an X-ray, to which a radiation image is to be input, for instance, and a radiation imaging system. 2. Description of the Related Art Heretofore, there has been developed a radiation imaging system for recording a radiation image of an object in the form of a radiation dose, for instance, X-rays which have been transmitted through the object. As for such a radiation imaging system, there have been in practical use various types such as a dry-type radiation imaging system in which an image is recorded on a silver halide film in the state of radiation transmitted through the object, a wet-type radiation imaging system in which an image is recorded on a silver halide photographic material in the state of radiation transmitted through the object, and a radiation imaging system which is of a combination of the above-mentioned two systems (socalled the hybrid type radiation imaging system). For instance, in the case of the wet-type radiation imaging system, there is known a radiation imaging system in which the silver halide photographic material is used as a photostimulable phosphor (hereinafter referred to as "PSP") capable of recording a radiation image therein upon being exposed to radiation transmitted through the object (see Japanese Patent Application Publication (hereinafter referred to as "

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. — A staple for beachgoers in California and other states along the Pacific Coast will be returning soon, but this time with a much different look and name. They're going to be called albatross nests, an amendment to the state's beach rules approved on Tuesday by the California Coastal Commission. The state agency agreed to add the new term in order to clarify what's allowed at the beaches. The commission's 10-member panel voted 4-0 in favor of the change, including one member who abstained. Albatross nests are essentially beached eggs, usually left on beaches by migrating albatrosses that build nests with sticks and seaweed to form a protective shelter for their young. The new name was requested by two nonprofit groups that had argued that the term "nest" could bring up questions about environmental concerns. "Beachcomber" was suggested as a more appropriate term. "That's an appropriate term to describe a nest," commission member Connie P. Atkins said, noting that the commission had made recommendations in 2007 to the same effect. Commission member David C. Chaney Jr., a staunch opponent of local rule changes, said: "This is our kind of layer of protection." Under the new rule, beach users can have albatross nests removed at any time. Permits to collect them will still be required. Before the vote Tuesday, commission member Neil Latouche, a Berkeley-area resident, asked whether the nest at Pinellas County's Clearwater Beach was considered a real nest. The commission's staff person said that it was, and that a permit was required. Latouche then suggested an amendment to also require permits for trash bags that could be used to collect and carry away nests. The staff person replied that was allowed, but the commission adopted the amendment unanimously. The commission also agreed to establish a permit fee for albatross nests and to monitor how well the permits are being enforced. To reach a better understanding of the company, this post will be divided into eight topics. I will try to explain the technology, what it is used for, and how this helps your business. 1. Artificial Intelligence The new wave technology of the information era is Artificial Intelligence. People already
