Compare Figure 3 with Figure 5. In addition, by the amplification principle, valences can be modified: Positive experiences get amplified by the same amount (dashed line: A) as the decreased negative experiences (solid line: A).](fpsyg-06-00920-g0008){#F8} In this example, every reduced negative or increased positive experience is interpreted as a successful experience in line with the amplification principle (solid line: a). There are only two types of situations which can be associated with unique experiences: changed from successful to unsuccessful experiences (solid lines: o), and vice versa (dashed lines: o). These lines indicate the possible, and not necessarily unique, valence interpretation of future experiences (solid line: A), which is different for the solid and the dashed line
