Mediterranean Red Sea marine sediments in a Mediterranean coastal lagoon: implications for global change history. The Mediterranean Red Sea, bounded by the Israeli coastline and the Palestinian borders, has been influenced by various tectonic events as well as by the sea level fluctuations of the Plio-Holocene. The aim of the present study is to investigate the tectonic and sea-level context of sedimentary deposits within the southern basin of this marine lagoon to gain insights into the impact of these processes on the palaeogeography of the Mediterranean world. Sediments deposited since the middle of the Holocene have been studied, using a total of 97 sediment samples from the thalweg of a river, the Jordan River, and the lagoon's inner and outer perimeter. Age models have been dated using (210)Pb, (137)Cs and (14)C. Sea level changes have been estimated by radiocarbon and (210)Pb dating of the lagoon bottom. On the basis of all these data, we have drawn a panoramic picture of the evolution of sea level fluctuations and sedimentary deposits in this coastal environment.
