When he was assassinated in St. Louis, he managed to arrange for a loan on the property by Willard Ames, owner of the Ames Bank. E.E. Moore, one of the founders of E.E. Moore, General Store in Jefferson County, Missouri, served with members of the infamous Missouri Border Ruffians, a guerrilla army that operated from 1858 until 1864. Louise Smith lived in St. Louis as a young girl. She married Muriel Jones of Georgia. When the Jones moved to Minnesota, the new, young couple created a legacy of the arts and culture of pre-Civil War Missouri. Mary Kolenc and her husband, Henry Hoefer, are buried in Washington Cemetery. Family lore suggests that Hoefer was an officer in the Civil War, although all records are lost. Eugene Sedelmayer was a member of the John Brown raid on Osawatomie, Kansas, in 1856. Born in Germany, he became friends with Brown after a brief encounter at the German Lutheran seminary in Muhlenburg, Germany. James R. Morts, a well-known Missouri publisher, owned and operated the Morts Printing Company. He died in 1892. In 1884, after an apprenticeship, he established the first newspaper in Jefferson County, The St. Louis News. Thomas S. Buell, born in Pennsylvania, was an attorney for the Buell Coal Company in St. Louis. He died in 1906. The Missouri Militia was organized in 1847. The militia had five battalions in the state, St. Louis City having one. The St. Louis City Battalion had 21 members, including Henry J. Marcellus and Edwin J. Sims. It was a common practice for the city militia to guard the city boundaries while the state militia was engaged in the West. The fort was built in 1855 and was a present to the city from the state. It replaced an earlier fort in the same location. The brick fort had four cannons but had no garrison. The Missouri State Militia regularly visited the fort during an average spring thunderstorm. Albert Guffey was the only son of a slave owner from Ohio. He became a successful businessman in St. Louis. His uncle, Daniel Guffey, was
