3. Create a new document. In the new document, you'll create a layer group for the best way to manipulate the image. For the purposes of this exercise, the first image that you'll be manipulating (Step 4) is already in that layer group so that you can manipulate it at this layer level. 4. Choose File ⇒ Open. Navigate to the _'0851_birdseries_Vir_layergroup' file that you created in the "The Layers Architecture" exercise (page 26). If you're not already there, place it in the same folder where you're working. 5. Open the file. You're looking at the bird series in this tutorial so you should be able to see your bird now. 6. Make the background black (seeFigure 9-1). Select Layer ▸ New. Click on Background and click the Select icon in the upper-right corner of the color well, then drag a black selection box over the whole picture. Click the OK button to create a new background layer. Figure 9-1. At this point you'll start with a plain background. If you plan to add more layers to this image after creating the bird, you'll use a _layer group_ to combine the layers into a single, easy-to-manipulate unit. 7. Add an adjustment layer. Click the Layer menu and select Layer ▸ New. Type Adjustment in the New Layer dialog box and click the OK button. The Adjustment window opens (see Figure 9-2, top). Figure 9-2. The Adjustment window enables you to make adjustments to individual images in a batch. The adjustment you're making at this point applies to the entire photo. (The title of the adjustment window will appear in bold type, however.) 8. In the Adjustment window, set the bluish hue in the H/S (highlighted) window to 00 (zero). Click the bottom-right corner of the H/S window to make the slider's horizontal and vertical handles visible. Move the slider controls all the way to the left—toward green. Then reduce the opacity of the adjustment layer until it is about 60 percent. The adjustment layer should look like Figure

Q: Is it possible to select a target using a "move to" function? When you have a selected item in an object, you can hold shift+the mouse and use the move-to function to move the item around in 3D space. In a CAD program, I find it very useful to be able to "move to" points using the move-to function - in effect dragging the item to the point. Is there a way to do this in Blender? A: You can achieve this by naming a curve as the active object and making an "Auto Move" constraint on that curve. Once done, you can move to an object you want to use as a target, and the curve will move automatically to that object. Q: Swift 3.1 - UITextField won't appear as non-editable I've been working for the last two days to make the following done, but i cannot figure this out: I'm trying to make a UITextField appear as non-editable (but I want to be able to edit it). Currently I have: var msg = UITextField() msg.showsInheritanceDisclosureButton = false msg.text = "" msg.delegate = self self.view.addSubview(msg) This makes the UITextField appear (but is still editable) But what I want is: msg.showsInheritanceDisclosureButton = false msg.text = "" msg.delegate = self msg.isEditable = false self.view.addSubview(msg) This does NOT work at all for me, it doesn't even appear. I want a UITextField that doesn't appear to be editable, not the view of the UITextField appears as non-editable. Is there a way to do this, does anyone have a code example? A: The Swift 3.0 UITextField property isShowInheritedPropertyKey set to true by default. This is the default state for a UITextField in the storyboard. Since UITextField inherits from UIView, the default property value for those views is also true. You have to specifically set the property to false to get it look like what you want. There's
