The hierarchy of layers The hierarchy of layers within a Photoshop image enables you to stack layers on top of each other, and to blend them together to create a new layer. (As you can imagine, layers are effective ways to organize images that you want to experiment with on a computer.) In a Photoshop file, the most important section in a layer — and the most difficult to get wrong — is the Layer Settings drop-down menu, shown in Figure 3-6. It determines the group or "stack" of layers that the items below it will be grouped into. The settings are: * **Group:** Lets you specify what type of "stack" the elements on the layer are grouped into. * **Lock/Unlock:** Lets you lock or unlock elements on the layer. To lock an item, you select it and then click the Lock icon in the Layers panel. To unlock the item, click it, and then choose the Unlock icon in the Layers panel to unlock it. These options don't affect the organization of groups, but they affect the visibility or display of a particular layer. **Blend If:** Lets you set when a layer should be blended (its color should be combined or blended with the colors of other layers) and what happens when it's blended. You can choose a predefined blend mode, or you can customize the blend mode with the hue/saturation/value slider or the Curves panel. ***Blend Mode:** Determines what happens to the colors of a layer when it's blended. (You can read more about the blend modes in Book I Chapter 7.) You can see the typical choices in Figure 3-6. FIGURE 3-6: Customize the appearance of a layer by changing its layer settings.

Q: Which type of Flash video would be used for car videos? Which type of Flash video would be used for a video of a car changing gears? For example, if it's a video of someone turning a switch that sets the car to a different gear, what type of Flash video should be used? I know the answer should be "FLV" but I'm not 100% sure. A: What you're describing is probably the format of a GIF animation, also known as an "Animated GIF". The GIF format is a compression method for animation files, so it's probably what you were thinking of as your answer. I have no idea whether there is an "official" flash format for this, but there doesn't appear to be a problem as long as it's in the GIF format. EDIT: GIF is basically a snapshot of an animation every X frames, where X is usually around a 1-7, depending on quality. Then it is compressed, and a link is created that causes the browser to actually "play" the animation on demand, showing a snapshot of the animation at the current moment. The animation speed is hard coded into the file format, not user-defined (unlike flash). GIF is simple, but is horribly prone to transmission problems, and so not really popular outside of digital image distribution. Here is a tutorial on how to do this in Flash. NEW YORK (CBSNewYork/AP) — A married couple planning to wed next week has had the wedding ceremony hit by a New York City subway accident – and they say an emergency childbirth may have played a role. With a total of seven people injured in the crash – including a pregnant woman, her husband and their six-year-old daughter – all have been released from the hospital, NYPD said Saturday night. "They're a fairly healthy family, and they're out and about with the family," said Kim, not using her last name. "I guess they're doing pretty well." But while everyone has been released from the hospital, she said the family's emotional healing hasn't started yet. "It's pretty horrible," she said. "It's not like I'm traumatized – I'm just sad for the little girl
