I vote for Lola with a preposition (leela), but suggests the words 'manipuri' or 'hmar' as more acceptable for Manipuri. What would be the implications for native speakers of these languages? Leela with a preposition (leela/leelam) is Hindi official in India and many other countries like United States, USA. Then, the same word with a prefixed leela (rata) is used in all three languages, almost like a proto-language. For example, leela means vegetarian in English. 'Hmar' is also a popular word for people in Manipur State, but not for all the people in India. 'Hmar' means belonging to Hmar community in India. In either case, I have no idea what the relevance of the manipuri as a preferred name of the community is. My 2 cents The Indian system is very competitive and to keep it simple, there are many opportunities, pressures and ties to keep people working in the society in a competitive way. We have all heard stories of people who decide to kill themselves and all the reasons for them. In order to have an interesting and unique life, we need to go beyond the logic of people killing themselves. To do this, we need a change in the society, for once, and that is possible only when we take steps and stand for changes in this society. Everybody comes to this country with an objective to improve themselves, which is not exactly the same of what is done in our system. If we want to improve ourselves, the things that we need to focus on are different than what is kept in mind by the system, and there is nothing wrong if we come to this country with that objective. Society has changed and each person is progressing in his/her own way. In the Indian system, it is very obvious that we always think in terms of numbers, which is not the case in this
