in patients attending the eye clinic in Norway. To investigate the prevalence of visual field loss in patients attending the Oculoplastics clinic in Norway. To record distribution of visual field loss. The medical records of all patients attending the eye clinic at the University Eye Hospital of Norway from January 1, 2000, to January 1, 2004, were reviewed. A total of 100,648 patients were identified. The medical records of all patients meeting the inclusion criteria were carefully reviewed. Patients with an incomplete registration were excluded. Only one eye per patient was included, unless the eye presented a visual field defect. The visual field test was performed with Goldmann perimeter. The visual field test included 30-2 SITA standard threshold program. In total, 628 patients met the inclusion criteria and 628 eyes were examined. The median age was 67 years. The prevalence of visual field loss in those older than 65 years was 12.2%. Visual field loss was bilateral in 13.4% and unilateral in 5.9% of patients. The main diagnoses in patients with visual field loss were glaucoma in 72%, diabetic retinopathy in 9.4%, age-related macular degeneration in 5.9%, and other in 7.6% of cases. The main diagnoses were different in the four age groups studied. We found a high prevalence of visual field loss in those older than 65 years. The prevalence of visual field loss was higher in patients with a glaucomatous cause of visual loss. This study supports the need for a routine visual field test as part of the overall work-up in patients with visual field loss or suspected glaucoma.Q: Proper way to write SQL logic into Helper class for unit testing I'm building a class library which will perform some basic data manipulation operations. The plan is to build a set of SQL queries for each logic operation, to be performed against a database in a plain old ado.net application. The structure of the logic looks like this: private class LogicHelper { public void Sql1(Db
