Sjögren's syndrome is an autoimmune disease which can have profound effects on salivary function and the oral health of affected patients. The mechanisms which lead to the development of the disease and contribute to the irreversible impairment of salivary glands are poorly understood. Many studies have demonstrated that the salivary gland becomes infiltrated by an infiltration of T and B cells. Although the presence of these lymphocytes is associated with the development of the disease, it is not clear if these cells are responsible for the disruption of the glandular parenchyma. The objective of this study is to examine the role of T cells in the pathogenesis of salivary gland dysfunction. The Thy 1.2 transgenic mouse model will be used to create T cell deficient mice. The Thy 1.2 positive transgenic mice are B cell deficient and lack the CD4 T cell subset and therefore are unable to mount an immune response. These mice will be bred with mice containing a disrupted Slc11a1 gene, a gene encoding the natural cytotoxicity receptor NK-1.1, to produce T cell deficient Sjogren's mice. These double transgenic mice will be compared to mice expressing NK-1.1 alone. The transgenic mouse studies will be compared to wild type mice. The phenotype of the Sjogren's and wild type mice will be examined after submandibular gland immunization with a semi-permanent antigen. Biochemical assays will be performed to evaluate the integrity of the salivary gland parenchyma, and morphological studies will be performed to evaluate the destruction of the gland. Gene arrays will be used to compare the gene expression profile of the Sjogren's and control mice. The Sjogren's mice will be examined histologically and with immunohistochemistry to compare the presence of macrophages, T cells and B cells in ca3bfb1094
