The most simple thing I can come up with is: `Vue.prototype.$children[0].id` But this returns: (index) [{...}] 0: {[HTMLDivElement]: } length: 1 `__proto__: Array[0]` It's really the child from within the parent element that I'm interested in. A: Use `this.$el.id` or the unique id as shown here: `Vue.prototype.$children[0].id` Reference: Screening for pulmonary tuberculosis by means of low-dose chest x-ray in children in primary care setting in China. The prevalence of tuberculosis (TB) in children in China is high and there is a lack of evidence supporting the optimal screening method for TB

In vivo correlations between gene expression profiles of multidrug-resistant human colon cancer cells and the in vitro growth patterns of the wild-type cells. Although it is known that genes regulating cell cycle progression and apoptosis can influence the growth and proliferation of tumor cells, limited information is available on how cell cycle regulatory genes correlate with in vitro drug sensitivity in multidrug-resistant (MDR) cancer cells. The purpose of this study was to determine whether the in vivo growth pattern of MDR human colon cancer (HCC) cells is similar to that of MDR cells cultured in vitro and whether the transcriptional expression pattern of MDR cells in vivo would correlate with the in vitro drug sensitivity of the wild-type cells. HCC cells transfected with subconfluent sensitization (A818-4B) or p185 cells (HCC1419) served as parental drug-sensitive cells. R10 and R2M cells were developed from parental HCC A818-4B cells that were cultured in 10-fold serially diluted drug concentrations of vinblastine or methotrexate and then subpassaged into drug-free medium until the cell population was established in a R10 and R2M subline, respectively. HCC1419/vincristine cells were derived by culturing the parental HCC cells, transfected with the expression vector containing the human multidrug resistant gene (MDR1), in the presence of 10
