who sold on their own account. Membership in this elite, clandestine fraternity was codified in 1934 and was only extended to people aged between 17 and 45. Although the club was formed to promote and defend British claims in an ocean that comprised more than half of the earth's surface, it soon became one of the most powerful and influential institutions in the world. It was a place in which the most exclusive clubhouses could be found in exclusive neighborhoods like Mount Street in Mayfair and Sloane Square in Chelsea. Members include an elite group of former politicians, actors and media personalities, as well as captains of industry such as the Rothschild brothers, former Prime Minister David Cameron, Chancellor of the Exchequer George Osborne and the current Prime Minister David Cameron. But the term "amateur", something almost exclusively used to describe sport, became heavily associated with the club, which encouraged its members to play a multitude of sports - from tennis and polo to football and cricket - offering them the chance to compete against the likes of Sir Edmund Hillary, among others. The most important member of the club is undoubtedly the Prince of Wales, who is a frequent visitor to the club's headquarters in the heart of Mayfair. In December 2001, Prince Charles and his then-girlfriend, the former Princess of Wales, Diana, went down an elevator to the 85th floor of the Grosvenor House Hotel on London's Park Lane in order to celebrate the sixth anniversary of their wedding. There, they found the Prince of Wales
