My job is to enforce the law. I'm enforcing that law." While Walker remains the underdog, Republican consultants and insiders tell The Hill they think the combination of a third-party libertarian candidate and a ruling by the highest court in the nation will beat back the appeal by the conservative activists. And in that event, they think Walker will have the numbers to stay on as governor. Tommie McEvoy, a Republican strategist who has not yet endorsed Walker, said, "I think Scott Walker's base will be loyal to him and I think his base will dig in and he will continue to run the kind of campaign he's run to this point." Another Republican consultant who has supported Walker, but won't endorse him, said, "The Supreme Court has already made a decision, and once a decision is made by the high court, it's final. So in that respect, it's going to be hard to do anything other than go with what the Supreme Court says." "I think [Walker] will win anyway, but he's not going to like it," the consultant said, adding that Walker has been "slow to sort of engage with the issues at the table with [the union] protests. I think that's where he's going to get into trouble." Despite a recent campaign ad from Walker attacking the ruling as a "very ominous" threat to constitutional freedom, none of his rivals are addressing the issue on the campaign trail. Rep. Paul Ryan (R-Wis.), who is the chairman of the Republican National Committee, is scheduled to return to Wisconsin on Friday and plan to hold a news conference on the ruling. The Supreme Court's 5-4 ruling brought mixed reactions from the Republican base. While a prominent conservative activist said that the court was wrong, others reacted with anger to news of the ruling. "We must not let this infringe on the constitutional rights of an entire industry. This is America, and an entire industry can be tossed into the trash heap of history?" conservative activist David Koch wrote on his blog
