One: Color is a property that affects us in a very specific way. It allows us to make complex mental representations that reference the external world. No two colors are the same, but we all look for patterns in the world around us, whether that be the way the clouds change color from day to day, or animals that change color over time (a healthy frog will take on a beautiful golden yellow color over the summer). We can see patterns in everything we look at, whether it be the motion of a ball or the patterns on the surface of the eye. So, when we see that a lion is hot, we take a complex mental representation of the environment to observe that the lion is hot. We could easily imagine that to be colder. If we were to show you a video of a lion as it is cooling off, you would easily observe the transition of the color. This mental representation can be an incredibly useful tool in the world. Not only do we see patterns in almost everything we look at, but we can also use the images we see to work with other tools. We can look at a globe to find out the seasons, or we could say that a lion is hot and take it to mean that it's no longer hungry. I hope that is enough to get you going on your own thoughts about color. Ask if you need me to say more, or post a comment below. 0.14
